Dianne Gray
President of Hospice and Healthcare
Communications

For the past 30 years, Dianne has created, researched and implemented global advocacy, tech, education, and mass media projects for film, television and print media, involving all aspects of end-of-life, death, grief, hospice and palliative care.

As an End-of-Life Doula and Certified Grief Specialist, she has helped hundreds of people as they face death and thousands who've needed her special blend of compassion, empathy and evidence-based care while trying to cope with profound trauma, grief and loss.

Currently, she's also Chief Innovation Officer for Acclivity Health Solutions, a forward-thinking tech and analytics company that harnesses the power of AI and machine learning to improve outcomes for seriously ill and dying patients across the healthcare continuum. She is also CEO of Hospice and Healthcare Communications, founded to improve communication between seriously ill patients and their providers through innovative media content development and research.

Dianne is also an award-winning writer/journalist, global keynote speaker, 12-year board member for the Elisabeth Kubler-Ross Foundation, and founder of several non-profits that improve care for seriously ill children and adults. She is also Global Ambassador of International Children's Palliative Care Network and the grief content creator for the Choose Love Movement, who places SEL educational programming in 14 countries and 50 states.

Throughout, Dianne sees her family's ten-year pediatric hospice/palliative care experience with her son, Austin (who died in 2005 as a result of a neurodegenerative disorder) as the gift of a lifetime.

Intergenerational Trauma & Grief: Healing Yourself Helps Heal Your Family

AGENDA

8:45 AM - 9:00 AM: Log In and Virtual Networking

9:00 AM - 11:00 AM: Presentation

The ways in which family members navigate intergenerational trauma and as well, death, grief and healing can set the precedent for the rest of our lives and the lives of younger generations. For example, a grandparent who refused to examine the impact of her trauma may be teaching her grandchildren (intentionally or unintentionally) to ignore the impact of their own traumatic experiences. Sooner or later the trauma is likely to be triggered by something one cannot hide from, no matter how hard he or she tries. We will examine intergenerational grief, loss, and trauma, and also opportunities for inter-generational healing, which is how one family member's pain (past and present) and potentially his or her journey toward peace and healing, can impact what we love, long past our time on earth. We will also examine generational attitudes toward physical and mental health, gender identity, spirituality and cultural expectations and how they all combine to create opportunities for emotional suffering and uniquely, present day healing that can shift wellness for lifetimes to come.
